	The Army Signal Corps Engineering Laboratories, Fort Monmouth, New Jersey, has developed a hand-held TV camera with a back-carried transmitter that a soldier can use to send battle pictures to his command post. The camera weighs 8 pounds and the transmitter or sending station with build-in power supply 47 pounds. The transmitted image is equal to commercial quality. The armed roving TV cameraman, freed from the cumbersome cable connections that limited his movements afoot, can now reach previously inaccessible spots such as those the film graphically portray. Sequences shown: (a) Army Signal Corps Engineering Laboritiies, Fort Monmouth, New Jersey.
	(b) Soldier holding TV camera shoots scene to be reproduced on screen. (c) Cameraman and gunners prepare to leave. (d) Jeep and TV receiving equipment. (e) Cameraman and gunners proceed through woods on way to enemy site.
	(f) Cameramanphotographs dam while gunner communicates with jeep on Signal Corps handy-talkie. (g) Various scenes as seen by movie camera and then reproduced on TV screen.
