SIR KINGSLEY WOOD.

after

SV. I have some good news for those who are overlooked by governments. We call them The Black-Coated Workers. People of small means like clerks, many shopkeepers, dressmakers, music teachers, and farmers Things are often difficult for them. They have many responsibilities, families and otherwise. Up to the present, unlike hundreds of thousands, who are in employment, CUFamily and otherwise. Up to the present, unlike hundreds of thousands who are in employment, they have not had the benefit of any State scheme to enable them to make some provision for their old age or for widows' and orphans' pensions. Parliament is now being asked to meet this considerable need, and I have no doubt will be glad to give it its approval.

CU Repeat, as above.

L
SV With the help of a large Exchequer contribution many of those I have mentioned will be able to come into the contributory scheme as from January next, and I need hardly tell you that not only England and Wales, but Scotland is in this. It is the country's industrial recovery that has made this great social reform possible.
