Royal gift to the London County Council are four ambulances and eight mobile canteens which King George donates as a contribution to civil defence. Personnel of the L.C.C. ambulance service will act as drivers, a brave job while London is being bombed every night. Plenty of ambulances will mean that air raid casualties can be rushed to hospital while there's good chance of saving life.

The mobile canteens will be a boon in raided areas, providing a good cup of tea and something hot to eat at the time they're most needed. We could all wish these vehicles would never be wanted; as it is London may have good cause to be grateful for the royal gift.

How to sleep eight in an Anderson shelter. A London policeman has solved the problem and wants to show how it's done. Four raised bunks are built lengthwise. Two wider ones, each for two children, are arranged crosswise at the back. Anybody can do the job who can use a saw and hammer.

Now for the flea-bag. Take a good blanket, seven feet by six-and-a-half. Line with muslin, sew both together, all down and across, and fill the resulting pockets as you go with wollen rags. Good tips, for owners of the two-and-half-million Anderson shelters.

No sooner had Roumania got rid of King Carol than it invited Helen the Queen Mother, back to the country. Dictator Antonescu and 19-year-old King Michael welcomed her. The traditional bread-breaking preceded the Queen's drive to the Palace.

Continental censorship and war-transport hold-ups have delayed
