Kensington Palace is the latest famous building to be bombed. It's been a royal home since the days of William III. Queen Anne lived here, and it was here that Queen Victoria was born and lived till she came to the throne. Incendiary bombs caused the fires, but the damage is by no means beyond repair.

Chelsea Hospital was hit by H.E. bombs, which damaged two wards. This is the place where they house the Chelsea Pensioners, not the football team. Happily none of them were injured. Pretty tough to be bombed now, when you came through the battle of Hastings without a scratch.

Uncle Sam rushes his new iron cavalry. At this plant 8000 scout-cars are being built - 45 million dollars worth. The 4-wheel-drive rough-riders carry quarter-inch armour-plate, and take the bumps at 50 miles an hour. Production is going on night and day. American war industries are on the march.

Track: Make way for to-morrow.
Discs: 530.406.

The Greek Cathedral in Bayswater held a special service of intercession on behalf of the invaded motherland. It was attended by the Duchess of Kent. Her Royal Highness is a cousin of King George of Greece. It's a source of pride to her, as to Greeks everywhere, that her countrymen are making such a magnificent stand.

Track: Voo Voom.

This state prison held a rodeo to give the convicts a chance to be cowboys. It was visiting day, so there was quite a crowd to witness the new experiment in prison welfare.

The warden looked the part, just as if he was on the movies - and the rodeo was on. Naturally the broncs drew the line at being ridden by convicts.

Notice the men wore prison garb below the waist, so next time a cowboy's seen in striped trousers they won't believe him if he says he's going to a fancy dress ball.

You wouldn't think a steer would throw a man when he's down ?
