A large prison compound has been set up in Egypt for the numerous Muslim soldiers captured from the Italian army. These men behind the barbed wire prove that our patrols in the Western Desert are doing good work. The captives report that intense anti-Italian feeling among the natives of Libya is adding to Graziani's troubles. The camp paraded in honour of the Senusi Chief, whose visit marked the end of Ramadan, the Mohammedan Lent.

Seyed Idriss came with presents of sugar, rice, tea and cigarettes, it being the custom of Sunusis to regale themselves when the fast's over. They welcomed their chief in the tribal manner by bringing a sheep for sacrifice. The ceremony pleased everyone, with the possible exception of the sheep, when it was over the Chief received the homage of his subjects, and there's a tribal way of rendering that, too.

The devout gave themselves up to prayer. Recently the Chief sought British protection and left Libya, as a protest against the savage Italian oppression. He and his people pray for British victory.
