Rushed to Britain come these exclusive pictures that tell how the R.A.F. paved the way for General Wavell's victory. Seizing the air initiative the British bombers swarmed over the desert, picked out scores of Italian aerodromes, both on the Egyptian side and deep into Libya, bombed them incessantly and relentlessly. Graziani's own reconnaissance planes were pinned down as if chains held them to the sands. The R.A.F. plucked out the enemy's eyes.

..... Those bombs shattered one of the well-camouflaged camps of Italian personnel.

And here's an attack on the aerodrome itself. First the airfield and its runways are pounded ... Now look at the bottom left side of the screen, and when Italian planes come into the picture see some of them smashed by direct hits.

The R.A.F. is over Libya helping in Britain's most victorious drive of the war so far.
