Here's what happens to bricks when the bombs have done with them. In Hyde Park the L.C.C. has the biggest brick and rubble dump in the country, and the Nazis see to it that it's always growing. Much that goes on the dump is waste, but the good bricks are picked out and used to make air-raid shelters.

(Sorting bricks) The authorities have first claim then builders, to make new houses for people bombed out.

(LV pile) Organisation is making good use of the buildings that have been knocked down.

Of buildings that still stand, artists are improving the appearance by paintings on the glass-substitute windows. Many cities have streets where an unbroken window almost looks like vulgar display, but that's no reason why the new window-coverings should be ugly, so artists have come to the rescue.

(Five Scenes Without Voice)

(CU painting hat fashions) That genius of comic invention, Heath Robinson, has painted his idea of war today, a lot more amusing than the real thing.
