Wendell L. Willkie was among visitors yesterday afternoon. He inspected the air-raid souvenirs of bombs and airplane fragments carried by the Iron Duke, obligingly posed for news photographers and left a contribution for the British War Relief Society, which is seeking funds to buy modern motorized canteens for services in England.

Mr. Willkie, Republican presidential candidate in 1940, visited England recently. A number of Washington officials and their wives also visited the "Iron Duke" while it was parked in front of local headquarters for the society at 1018 Connecticut avenue N.W. Still another caller was Maurice Evans, British actor who had been playing an engagement at the National Theater.
