The Free French forces now stationed in Britain showed in their Spring manoeuvres that they are fully mechanised and well-practised in the war-tactics of 1941. We fight an enemy who has taught the world the supreme value of speed. To foil his attacks our own troops must be rushed to the menaced positions with no delay. Always better than the Germans in a hand-to-hand fight the Allies are learning that war moves fast, and a battalion in the right place is better than whole divisions ten miles away. Hence, high speed mobility is the keynote of army training today.

(2ND BREN SCENE: FRONT VIEW)The Free French are brave men who prefer exile to slavery. They fight till the enemy is driven from all the fair lands he now despoils.
