England

remaining free people of Europe are being battered and destroyed. If we allow the valiant British to fall we shall be the next to feel the onrush of this barbaric force with its insidious propaganda, mechanized war-fare and revolutionary political purposes.

But some among us say we are weak and unprepared: that the British are bound to fail and that our own hope lies in locking ourselves behind our own defenses while freedom collapses all about us.

One might as well seek to guard his own home with an iron fence while all his neighbors are sickening and dying of a contagious disease which cannot be kept out by mere iron bars.

This is a doctrine of confusion, fear, despair. If we had followed this doctrine in the past, in all the struggles we have undertaken, we would not possess freedom today. It is a cowardly doctrine, unworthy of our past, destructive of our future.

I reject and rebudiate utterly - as I know you do - any such doctrine of defeat and despair. The truth is that if we see to it that the ever increasing production of American factories and farms is safely delivered to England, England will not only survive; we will win. And personally, I am not interested in mere words and technical phrases. I care not whether you call safe delivery - conveying - patrolling - airplane accompaniment - or what not. We want those cargoes protected at once and with less talk and more action. That is America's right and also her duty and her self-interest. If America will but do that - she will not alone save freedom but provide her own last probable chance ultimately to avoid war.

We have listened of late to self-styled practical men, who tell us that such messages of hope are but the words of politicians and idealists. That if we remaining free people of Europe are being battered and destroyed. If we allow the villainous British to fall we shall be the next to feel the onrush of this barbaric force with its insidious propaganda, mechanized warfare and revolutionary political purposes.

But some among us say we are weak and unprepared. That is the only reason we are bound to fail and that our own hopes lie in locking ourselves behind our own defenses while the aggressor advances all about us.

One might as well seek to guard his own home with a iron fence while all his neighbors are speaking and dying. The only disease which cannot be kept out by mere iron bars.

This is a doctrine of confusion, fear, despair. It has followed this doctrine in the past, in all our struggles with our enemies, we would not possess freedom today. It is a cowardly doctrine unworthy of our past, destructive of our future.

I reject and repudiate utterly - as I know you do - a doctrine of defeat and despair. The truth is that it is to it that the ever increasing production of American factories and ships is safely delivered to England, England will not only survive; she will win, and personally, I am not interested in mere words and technical phrases; I care not whether you call safe delivery - conveying - patrolling - airplane accompaniment - or what not. We want those cars goes protected and of once and with less talk and more action. That is America's right and her duty and her self-interest.
