Fighting planes of the South-Eastern Command made a business-like show, lined up for inspection by the Prime Minister of New Zealand, Mr. Peter Fraser.

The V for Victory sign doesn't just mean nerve-war when the RAF use it. Mr. Fraser was met by the War Minister, Captain Margesson.

After the planes the New Zealand Premier saw a tank-brigade in action. Operations were directed by radio.

(CU USING GLASSES) The visitor saw the genners have some firing-practice.

With tanks as with planes the joint Anglo-U.S. production now probably exceeds the German output. It's the same with artillery. And whereas Nazi production has reached its maximum - or is very near it - we can increase ours a long way yet. Our machines and men are better, too. That's been proved and perhaps before long we shall demonstrate it again. Mr. Fraser went inside a tank, where cameras in war time aren't allowed. Altogether he saw that this part of the war machine is all set to go.
