Our giant coastal guns ill-advisedly casting their clouts before every now and then have a pot at something August has done its worst on the other side of the Channel. The French coast is well within range of modern heavy artillery. These nice little shells weigh close on a ton, make an excellent impression and are among the few things of which the Germans aren't rationed - not if we can help it.

(GV LIFT) You may think this is just an ordinary sort of shoot, but you wait. They're ready to fire. Look out, Adolf.

Well bless me if that V-for-Victory business hasn't reached America. They've even started clubs. One new member had a Fifth Columnist in tow - looking for a V lamppost.

By this time you'll have gathered that everybody's so busy painting V.s it's a wonder there's time for anything else. Nothing can put a damper on the campaign, not even rain.

Girls have turned the Victory idea to ornamental use.

Planes on the way to Britain have the sign and fly in V-formation. And there's so many on the way, victory's a sure thing.

In the blitzed heart of the City of London a mobile post office made its first appearance. They'll send one wherever there's been a bad raid, which has put post offices out of action. The Post Master General, Mr. W.S. Morrison, saw the experiment get under way. And no more jokes about the post office taking its own sweet time. Watch 'em getting set up.
