Some happy British youngsters are finishing the second summer holiday they've had since they been in the States. Guests of the English Speaking Union they're housed at the famous Wellesley College of Massachussetts, and they're making good headway learning American games. This is the way they toss for innings at baseball.

Every batsman thinks he's a Babe Ruth in the making. America is seeing to it that the youngsters get a healthy child-life though there is a war on.

Barges of concrete are the latest way of saving steel, and therefore coal. The sides consist of reinforced slabs of various shapes and sizes, to fit the frame. In the completed barge metal represents only a tenth of the total weight. Concrete vessels are tough and last long. Some made in the last war are still going strong. Their chief use now is at the ports, getting ships unloaded at speed and out to sea again. This yard launches a new one each week. When we invade we shall want all the barges we can lay hands on, so the concrete fleet has an interesting future.

Two hundred officers and men learning to supervise physical training keep their eye on victory and start a course at the army P.T. school. See how quickly they get into gym togs.

(INSTRUCTOR) The latest training system makes a man thoroughly fit and alert - not slow and muscle-bound.

Here's something more exciting than physical jerks. To toss the 200-lb log requires several hefty Englishmen - or else one Scot from the Highland Games.

(CU OVER HEADS) It gets the men into A.I. trim, so that when the time comes they, or their sons, will be ready to fight the Germans.
