WOMEN AT WAR. Like their Phoenician forebears, these Lebanese women are preparing nets. But the nets are used for catching the deadliest fish in sea - submarines. In this school somewhere in the M.E. the Royal Navy trains women in the construction and repair of steel netting used in the protection of harbour works against prowling enemy submarines.

Those who fancy their hand at splicing should try it - on steel haulers. You h babies eh? and indeed they would be if these were giant cannon balls - in point of fact they're floats used for supporting submarine nets, one of which can be seen here undergoing repair. The women of the Middle East more and more are playing their part in helping to win this war.
