ARMY'S NEW FIELD GUNS LAY DOWN BARRAGE OF FIRE.

Enroute to proving grounds for final tests before being shipped overseas, the United States Army's new 240-millimeter howitzers roll into position. Each unit weighs ninety-one thousand pounds. The powerful mobile field guns hurl three-hundred-and-sixty-pound shells a distance of more than fifteen miles. And the command is.....FIRE!

Inside the MARS, which has the space of a fifteen-room house, members of the crew take their places....ready for the take-off.

Weighing one hundred and forty-one thousand pounds, the huge air-liner leaves the water with the grace of a mammoth bird.

Navy Scout planes escort the MARS out to sea. Fifteen hours later, the big ship landed at her destination after a two-thousand-four-hundred-mile non-stop flight.

Her intricate control board traces every phase of the plane's performance. The flight of the MARS marks the beginning of new, long-range aerial operations in the Pacific.
