BURMA RAIDS.

In India and over the Burma front, the monsoon has set in and that means blinding rainstorms, walls of thick black cloud and treacherous air currents with which flying aircraft about the sky like butterflies in the breeze. But this well-known squadron of Blenheim bombers carries on as usual. Here they're bombing up for a raid on a concentration of Jap troops reported near the town of Minbya in Burma.

Day after day they've been briefed only to find out just before the take-off that the operation has been cancelled due to a late weather report. On this occasion the weather was kind and the clouds broke for just long enough to let the bombers get a glimpse of their target. The bombs did the rest.
