

PRINCESS VISITS SCOUT EXHIBITION

Now eighteen and much in the news the Heiress to the Throne was welcomed to the National sea Scout exhibition. Her Royal Highness was in the uniform of a sea ranger, the girls' section of the movement. Scouting officers conducted her and showed her the interesting range of models here on exhibition.

(aft CU) Fellow sea rangers were busily at work when their royal comrade spoke to them. The scouting movement is a good guide through the years of adolescence.

Princess Elizabeth, now on the threshold of womanhood, may owe much to the friendly contact with other girls she has experienced as a Sea Ranger.
