ENEMY U-BOATS FAIL TO STOP CONVOYS SUPPLYING BRITAIN.

In North America, railroad marshalling yards at an Eastern port reveal freight cars loaded with thousands of tons of war material awaiting shipment to Allied invasion forces. An impressive glimpse of something of the huge resources behind the powerful armies of the United Nations.

Into thousands of ships go the products of the United States and Canada. Manned by seamen of many nations, the heavily-guarded transports are moving practically unmolested back and forth across the Atlantic. For today, so vigilant is the Allied patrol, enemy submarines are no longer a menace. There's one now. She's sighted by a Navy seaplane tender. Guns sweeping the trapped U-Boat, the tender sends another would-be raider to the bottom.
