American super power in the South West Pacific... bearing down on the Japs at Hollandia in what was Dutch New Guinea... Naval forces of Admiral Nimitz carrying MacArthur's ground troops... Fifth Air Force bombers smashing an invasion path from the sky. General MacArthur, with the greatest concentration of Naval strength he's ever had, sees the opening bombardment. Under the Commander's critical eye, landing craft head shoreward, the barrage protecting them. With Jap opposition smashed at this and two other points, in a one hundred and fifty mile sector, the occupations go forward. Signal Corps, Navy and Newsreel cameramen film the landing, veteran MacArthur-men leading the way... Even old timers take unexpected duckings. Where they looked for ten thousand Nips to fight to the last ditch, only hastily abandoned supplies remain... many a flame. From the amount of stores they left behind, the Japs must have been taken completely off guard.. 60,000 Japs are believed cut off by this flank attack as the Yanks push on towards Hollandia's three fine air fields. Hollandia, first pre-war Dutch territory retaken from the Japs, lies eleven hundred miles from the Philippines... MacArthur's avowed goal. As the General comes ashore the evidence of complete American victory is plain to be seen. Abandoned enemy equipment, wrecked defences and dead japs. One more step toward Tokyo! General MacArthur says: "Well done".
