Paris is bringing out its statues, put away for safe keeping during the war. The statue of Edward 7th was carefully conveyed to the theatre named after that monarch. Paris has a warm place in its heart for the memory of Edward the Peacemaker, the King who in 1904 brought about the Entente Cordiale. So back goes the statue of the far sighted ruler, who knew that upon Anglo-French accord rested the best hopes of Europe.

A conference of generals preceded the latest attacks on the Germans. Here with Monty and ~~Bradley~~ ^{Quar} Bradley, is Gen. Hodges (left), whose American 1st Army now fights on German soil. A German officer, riding on the bonnet of a jeep, conducted an American patrol to ~~amphibian~~ a position where he promised he could induce his ~~company~~ ^{battalion} to surrender. The Yanks took the risk of ambush and rounded up nearly 400 Germans. The incident, small in itself, indicates that enemy morale is not what it used to be.

(GV sit, af BV) Meanwhile, planning the rout of Germans still in the Channel ports, ~~Field Marshal Montgomery~~ ^{Monty} conferred with ~~Gen. Greer~~ ^{Canadian} and ~~Gen. Dempsey~~ ^{and Gen. Dempsey}, ~~Canadian G.O.C., and Gen. Dempsey, on the right.~~ More power to their elbow.
