D-DAY MEN WENCOMED HOME!

Two thousand people nearly raised the roof of the London Ferminue when the leave men came home. It was nearly seven menths since they embarked on the invasion of Europe, and successfully brought off one of the most hazardous operations in military history. These were the first men to come home. The spectators at the Station gave voice to the gratitude felt by the whole country.

Much water has flowed under the bridges since the never to be forgetten.

D-Day. What deeds the British Army has accomplished in half a year; first gaining a bridgehead against the strongest forces the enemy could muster, then fighting him back to Helland and the German border. Such, balbly stated is the achievement in which the men now on leave played apart.

(CV para) They had their days of triumphant, when all went well, and as always in war days of peril, when nothing would go right. Arnhom, Walcheren, Nijmegen, the Sheldt - never before has a British army crowded so much into so short a time.

They belleted for leave. Each unit was told how many men it was allowed and they drow lets for the lucky numbers. It will take some menths for leave to be given to all. Obviously only a fraction of the British forces on the Western Front can be spared at any one time. The fortunate men packed their equipment, ready for the transport detailed to take them to the embarkation port. Their joy can be well imagined. Into six menths they have crowded experience enough for a lifetime.

Rigid consorship forbids anything but the briefest glimpses of the Journey Home. They were coming on short leave. There is no tenic for the fighting men like a heliday in the lend he leves. May it not be long before they come home for good.
