

MOSCOW SALUTES VICTORY

Not even the capital of the Soviet Union, accustomed for many years to monster military parades, ever witnessed so imposing a procession ~~of war~~ triumphal as the victory march of the Red Army. There to salute his warriors stood Marshal Stalin. His old battle-comrade ^{Marshal} Budyenny at his side.

Catushas - rocket batteries famous in defence of Stalingrad - had no sooner passed than the roar of planes drowned the motor noise below.

~~Deafening Japanese attacks were a reminder that our great Russian ally is not in the war against Japan - at least not yet.~~ looked as if it
Okinawa defeat on the minds.
From Stalin to the humblest worker, we all Russia take pride in the invincible Red Army.
