TRUMAN SALUTES THE NAVY

An American Armada lines the Hudson River for a Presidential Review, giving to New Yorkers another of those great occasions to which they do full justice¹

Driving through Manhattan's canyon streets President Truman receives a great ovation. Five million people throng the famous sidewalks while from the skies pours down an avalanche of paper beyond the wildest nightmare of the crossing sweeper.

To a million listeners, the President outlines his hopes.

Then to the Fleet Review of fifty warships lining seven miles of waterway, while overhead the engines of twelve hundred planes add their deep roar to the thunder of saluting naval guns.

With pride the President reviews the fleet which has exacted retribution for all Pearl Harbour's treachery.

AN AIRY FAREWELL

The B.B.C. reduces power by one Watt and a farewell lunch is given the departing Variety Director by Foyles Literary Society at which comics of the ether vie in goodbye rudery. Askey gags..... Emney cracks, but the show is capped by Laurence....or is it Victor....Oliver.
