

WALKER CUP GOES BACK TO AMERICA

St. Andrews was optimistic. It was the first Walker Cup contest since nineteen thirty eight. Will Fyffe was hoping for the best; ^{to one 7 0} Henry Cotton was reporting for a Sunday paper. Many experts tipped Britain to repeat the ^{pre-was} ~~nineteen thirty eight~~ victory. Stanley Bishop, partnered by Riegel, opposed J. B. Carr and Ewing.... Riegel teeing off.

(crowd) This was a keen match, with the Americans slightly better all round. Riegel's putting was one of the big factors that led him and his partner to win a well-deserved victory by three and two. ... Carr unfortunately couldn't produce his best form on the greens.

(crowd) The British pair hung on well. Ewing drove the ball long and straight, but at this stage nothing could shake the American lead. The big crowd of very knowledgable golfers, always to be found at St. Andrews, then saw Kammer, ^{Scottish} ~~who was~~ partnered by Turnesa, beat their ~~British~~ opponents Kyle and Wilson.

Neither Wilson nor his partner had much luck on the green, and Turnesa and Kammer won by the handsome margin of five and four.

~~WALK~~

However, the walkie-talkie radioed back to the club-house the good news that Stowe and White had won by four and three, and Britain drew level in the foursomes when Lucas, playing with Crawley, beat Ward and Quick five and four.

News of the singles next day was the story of a rout. Richard D. Chapman, of Winged Foot, New York, was not expected to beat his Sandy Lodge opponent, the long-driving ~~P. Lucas, but beat him he did. Smylie Quick beat P. Lucas, but beat him he did. Smylie Quick beat P. Lucas, but beat him he did.~~

J. C. Wilson of Cawder eight and six.

(crowd) L. G. Crawley was beaten by Marvin Ward and the Americans ran out comfortable winners by six matches to two. And there was great gloom at St. Andrews, which lives for golf and had been counting on the Walker Cup being retained at headquarters.

So the trophy of Anglo-American amateur golf was presented to Francis Ouimet, the U.S. non-playing captain. We shall have to try to win it back two years hence.
