

SUPER FORTS HERE ON GOODWILL MISSION

Vivid reminder of Anglo-American wartime comradeship were the nine super-Flying Forts, approaching Margham airfield, in Norfolk, at the start of the U.S. Airforce goodwill visit to Britain. Lord Tedder bade them welcome.

The B.29's are the planes that bombed Japan out of the war and finally dropped the atom bomb on Hiroshima and Nagasaki. Colonel Sommers and his men pointed out that their parent unit ^{was} ~~is~~ the famous Ninety-Seventh Bombardment Group which initiated the American bombing of Germany. To ^t R.A.F., ~~officers~~ and spectators on the aerodrome it seemed like old times, to see the American airmen again. The Super Forts were opened for inspection, of which full advantage was taken by the younger generation. Welcome to these representatives of the air force which co-operated with the R.A.F. to bomb the way to victory.
