

FOOD PLOUGHED IN

Thirty-five year-old Farmer Dennis, Sudbury, Suffolk, had ^{of} nine acres of Buckwheat ploughed back into the ground by the ^{order of} local agriculture committee, ~~at a cost of~~ a loss of £400.

Ordered to plant mustard he grew buckwheat, claiming that mustard won't grow there. Mustard can be exported to pay for dried eggs. Buckwheat can feed hens, which lay real eggs; a more direct way of feeding us, but needing fewer officials and no forms. We live in strange times, ^{! me?}
