Mahatma Gandhi, the prophet of Free India, is seventy-eight. Delhi proclaimed a public holiday in his honour. All Hindus and many Muslims realise that more to Gandhi than to any other man does India owe her independence.

To the meeting place known as Gandhi Ground the Mahatma came with his grand-daughter and the wife of his grand-son. Though he has all his life resisted the conquests of machinery and science Gandhi availed himself of the microphone, so that the whole of India might hear his word. He deplored the anarchy prevailing in many parts of the country and hoped that before long the whole nation might prove itself worthy of its new independent status.
