

SELF-LAUNCHING MOTORBOAT NEEDS NO HARBOUR

A Durban doctor whose hobby is deep-sea fishing has built himself a boat he can keep in the garage and tow to the beach. Craft less than thirty-five feet long are not allowed to leave Durban Harbour, whose entrance is swept by the rollers of the Indian Ocean. So Doctor Halett puts to sea from the beach, in a boat very much cheaper than the smallest that would satisfy harbour regulations. Once on the sands the boat can run into the water under her own power. There's a special rudder to keep her on a straight course over the beach.

At the right time of the year fishermen off the Natal ~~coast~~ ^{coast of} are limited only by what the ^{ir} boat will carry. So quite a short cruise enables the doctor to supply the whole neighbourhood.
