

SMALL CARS CROSS OCEAN, EARN DOLLARS

Dollars for Britain were earned by fifty small sports cars exported to America where they've hit the public taste. Film star Ray Milland took one back with him recently and seems to have set the fashion for the pocket-sized high-performers, hitherto unknown in the land where few men care for a car less than half a block long. The cavalcade of potted-power made quite a brave sight advancing on London on the first stage of the journey to conquer America. It'll be quite a novelty across the Atlantic to see a car with a starting handle for when the battery's feeling run down, and other refinements scorned by the march of progress.
