KOREAN TROOPS JOIN BRITISH ARMY

As part of the move to encourage South Koreans to take a still bigger share in the defence of their country 200 were allowed to enlist in a British regiment. At Secule, the capital of South Korea, the men were fitted out and felt a bit strange at first in western uniform. However, the army know that Koreans are good military material when they're trained, and the men know they'll fight in a good cause, if they have to fight. Even a week ago it would have seemed a certainty that the recruits would eventually be in the line, but hope has dawned in Korea. The chance of peace - howeless) apparently only the other day - /now strong.
