

LONDON UNIV. WIN INTERNATIONAL BOAT RACE

Paris University were first <sup>on</sup> ~~into~~ the water at Mortlake for the race against London and Brussels. The Belgians were next; and they must surely be unique. Who else has a girl cox? Mlle. Van Ginneken is the right weight - 8st.-10 - and knows the right words in French and Flemish if any man catches a crab. Paris were nearest the camera, London in the Middle, Brussels away on the Middlesex side. The race ~~was~~ began at Mortlake, where the Oxford and Cambridge affair leaves off, and was over a mile-and-a-quarter course to Kew Railway Bridge. London led Paris by a quarter-of-a length at Chiswick, with Brussels in the rear, for all that Mlle. coxwain could say. This triple fixture was being held for the second time. It was instituted last year, when London won in Brussels.

(2 af typ) At the finish London, modestly hiding behind that barge, passed the line easy winners by a length-and-a-half. Paris <sup>second,</sup> ~~two,~~ Brussels ~~third.~~

There's something in this ~~the~~ girl cox idea. Get a film-star to do it; your opponents won't be in such a hurry to dash away. And when it's all over - just imagine!
