

FLASHES

Lovely French Creek, fisherman's paradise in Custer State Park, South Dakota, staged a piscatorial contest, Pres.

Eisenhower versus the local trout. They, poor fish, found he could cast a line as expertly as he leads armies or rules the country. It's one thing to hook a trout, another to land it, but Mr. President is master of the whole art.

He relaxed here for a short time, earning his own supper and thinking up the answer to Korea and other headaches.

Not even a president can catch this one - the hydrofoil boat, on test in Maryland on the Patuxent River.

At speed she lifts the hull from the surface, touching 50 knots on the foils with less than half the power needed by an ordinary boat of the same size, and riding the waves in her stride.

Just the craft the navies are looking for for fighting at speed in coastal waters.
