ROYAL DIARY

Another Royal occasion. The second afternoon garden party held by the Queen and the Duke of Edinburgh, on the lawns of Buckingham Palace, was marred by showers of rain, and for the eight thousand people present it was once more an umbrella day.

There were many visitors from overseas, including the members of the Everest Expedition, and, for those who are accustomed to sunny climates, this so-called summer of ours must have provided a melancholy experience.

The next engagement for the Queen and the Duke was a family one, to welcome home her Mother and her Sister on their return to London after their fortnight's tour of Central Africa.

The Queen Mother and Princess Margaret have had a most strenuous trip. But they've had the satisfaction of seeing for themselves the pleasure that their interest has given to the African people. Now for them and maybe, too, for Her Majesty and the Duke of Edinburgh, there will be the chance of a rest from the exhausting round of public engagements.
