Crack shots from all over the world battled with an awkward wind for the coveted Queens Prize at Bisley. Even in machinegun days armies are thankful for top-class rifelmen who can score a bull at a thousand yards. Well out of the way of the bullets, men in the butts mark the scores. The high wind made record shooting out of the question, though a very high standard was maintained by the marksmen. The their success, as the frame went up, encouraged even better shooting.
