

ROYAL FILM PERFORMANCE

A great crowd outside the Odeon Leicester Square watched eminent arrivals ~~at~~ at the Royal Film Performance, J. Arthur Rank ~~was~~ was once again host to Her Majesty. James Finley Curry was resplendant in a MacPherson tartan, and unfortunately not playing a trumpet was Kay Kendall. In effective diguise was a fugitive from the Wild West, Gary Cooper.

22 25

Alec Guinness, favourite of two worlds, was followed by that adorable star of Rob Roy (the ~~film~~ film shown) Glynis Johns.

Richard Todd was about to see himself in the character of Rob Roy. (Lovely Jeanne Crain took the eye even in that glamorous company.) There was one there but for whom all this might not have happened, the grand veteran Adolph Zukor, Pioneer of Motion Pictures, (The Queen, the Duke ~~and~~ and Princess Margaret were received by Reginald Bromhead and Robert Wolff, joint Presidents of the Cinematograph Trade Benevolent Fund, ~~in~~ the charity benefitting from this Royal Performance.

10

It must have touched the imagination of many ~~in the~~ <sup>present</sup> ~~entertainment world~~ <sup>to</sup> when/the young Queen, the Second Elizabeth, was presented the man, Adolph Zukor, who ~~at the age of~~ <sup>reached</sup> ~~80~~ <sup>reaches</sup> his Golden Jubilee in the Motion Picture world.

103

~~Highlander number two~~ Gary Cooper, as always, was effortlessly charming, ~~but~~ but understandably a little nervous. Meanwhile the Duke found a naval friend, Anthony Kimmins.

Highlander number two to be presented ~~with~~ <sup>was</sup> James Robertson Justice, playing Argyll in the film.

A bouquet was presented to the Queen by 7-year-old David Douglas-Morris.

Little Mandy Miller had the honour of presenting Princess Margaret's bouquet.

No-one who was in the theatre will ever forget that splendid evening, ~~an outstanding~~ occasion in the history of the great entertainment <sup>a royal</sup> which unites millions throughout the world.

160 *

200