

When U.S. footballers go into action it involves almost a regiment and you can hardly see man for armour.

At Wembley European finalists Landstuhl Raiders kicked off against London Rockets for the championship. The crowd (British part of it at any rate) <sup>Now</sup> saw the game most of them had never seen before except in films. London Rockets, well on the way to a touch-down here, lost the game, but did get over three times.

(next) The London side were jubilant when they scored the first touch-down. That word's misleading. The ball doesn't have to be put on the ground. The player can score by running with it into the end zone.

Rockets converted that one.

(aft crowd) Rockets went into a huddle but two sides can make plans. A long forward pass Landstuhl Raiders, into the attack <sup>after</sup>

Men toughened by this game could <sup>fight</sup> ~~form~~ an armoured unit that ~~wouldn't need any tanks.~~ 7 leave to tanks at home.

When it was all over the men from occupied Germany beat the Rockets, 30-to-21.
