ROYAL TOUR: HAPPY MEMORIES OF SOUTH ISLAND

Longbeach House, home of sheep farmer, afforded a short rest for the Queen and the Duke of Edinburgh before the last stages of the New Zealand tour. Her Majesty thanked Mr. and Mrs. Grigg for their hospitality. It was one of the rare experiences of home life the Royal routine provides. Next on the programme was to be a reminder of Scotland, for the Queen now went by train to Dunedin, a name with a Socttish sound to it.

From the townhall balcony the Queen acknowledged the cheers of Dunedin people. AND THE OL Danegiu beoble. HOULD BE ABLE TO FIND SOME WEARS

> A sports meeting staged at Carisbrooke was a distant reminder of the Highland Games.

How much wood can a woodchopper chop was strenuously put to the test. Next day the royal mother visited the Truby King Hospital, where the younger generation get a good start in life along lines famous throughout the world, doing what comes naturally.

> One very young New Zealander was so interested in the Queen's bouquet, it will evidently be some years before that learns that you give flowers to a lady, not take them.
