Inland water transport in Holland is ice-bound over most of the country. At the river end of the Amsterdam-Rhine Canal 300 vessels, millarge and small, were still laid up when these pictures were taken. So much money was being lost the Dutch brought their ice-breaker, Whale, te-the picture, to bring pressure on the ice to get cracking.

For days it was possible for cars to drive from the mainland to the holiday island of Marken, two-miles Zuider Zee. A bit of mild smuggling went on and the customs didn't know how to stop it.

Even in Spain it hasn't been very much warmer. It's many a year since they saw snow like this. In the pass of Pajares man the doubt the state railways were brought to a standstill for some days, despite efforts to plough through the drifts. Muche perer was the only thing when the mingue esgines couldn't get any further.

(driver) Eventually the line was cleared by the work of 500 men and 30 special engines. Quite a winter in sunny Spain.
