

~~in a laboratory sweat in sunshine and daggos the~~
~~shoes~~, New York has gone in for a heat wave in no uncertain manner. Nearly three hundred lives have been lost altogether, though every effort is made to snatch a little cool air from a temperature that steadily rises. / On the sidewalks of New York the kids have answered the burning question, but you can only do this up to a certain age. / In the shadow of Brooklyn Bridge there's plenty of water; otherwise it'd be a dog's life. / When you see an ice-block in the street you can either eat it or sit on it, but as Mr Chamberlain said --- We must keep a cool head.

RUSSIAN FLYERS.

On the principal aerodrome of Moscow a great welcome awaited the return of the heroes of the aeroplane flight to the North Pole --- four explorers from the U.S.S.R. who established a camp on a drifting ice-floe twelve miles from the Pole itself. / Leader of the expedition was bearded ~~professor~~ Schmidt, one of the greatest of Soviet scientists. Crowds waved and cheered as the Comrades were greeted affectionately by Stalin. / After the reception at the aerodrome, Moscow's heroes drove to the Kremlin through a blizzard of paper.