

PRINCESS JULIANA.

The days before the most important event in Holland's recent history were days of gay decorations with the whole of the Netherlands tip-toe with excitement. Press photographers and newsreel cameramen have been like anxious gathens, waiting outside the palace for any sign of the important arrival. Then Queen Wilhelmina arrived to call on her daughter --- travelling in the Dutch manner on a bicycle. Prince Bernhard, Princess Juliana's husband, has been riding in his new car, but he was driven by a chauffeur. After his recent accident, we are glad to say he is doing well. And then a great bustle of excitement heralded the approach of a large black car from which Princess Juliana herself waved to the crowd of subjects who wished her well.
