R.A.F.

Britain progresses with re-armament in the air --- and here is a demonstration by the 111th Fighter Squadron at Northolt. Pilots who six months ago were civilians have now been trained by the Royal Air Force to fly faster than anything in the world except the ^{actual} record-breaking seaplanes. These machines are the standard equipment of the R.A.F. --- the type that recently made the record flight from Edinburgh to Northolt in forty-eight minutes. These fighters can challenge comparison with any other Air Force. Flown regularly by day or night, they are safe and easy to manoeuvre despite ~~the fact that~~ their terrific speed of over four hundred miles an hour.
