

ST. PATRICK'S DAY.

441

The Colours were blessed before the march past in celebration of St Patrick's Day at College Green, Dublin. Mr Aiken, the Minister of Defence, was present to take the salute, ~~xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx~~ And on parade was the son of the Leader of Eire, Mr Vivion de Valera. There was nothing of the wild Irishman of tradition in this celebration --- it was all very warlike and rather sombre --- but that's how we are nowadays. But in London they were more light-hearted, ~~in the evening anyhow.~~ At the Albert Hall there were Irish dances, and the skirl of the pipes brought within the Dome of Kensington a breath of the Emerald Isle.

KING AND QUEEN.

They have some swanky new blocks of flats in South London, and the King and Queen went <sup>along</sup> ~~down~~ to look at them. <sup>In</sup> Lambeth, Wandsworth and Battersea ~~received an informal visit from their Majesties, giving us some delightful and democratic pictures of our well-loved royal family.~~ This is how the old order is changing --- somehow the old places don't seem the same. Soon the ~~only way~~ ~~you'll be able~~ to tell the difference between Park Lane and Lambeth will be to ~~take~~ look at the rent book. The King and Queen dropped in at No. 8 Portland House for a chat with Mrs Bush, and the atmosphere was just one of a friendly call among neighbours. Informality reigned again when their Majesties <sup>left and</sup> walked down the ~~street~~. Possibly the most delightful picture of all comes from Wandsworth --- the Queen paused for a chat ~~xxxx~~ with Mrs Sage, over the garden fence, ~~and they discussed a domestic problem.~~
