

LAUNCH OF H.M.S. NAIAD

Much-needed work for Hebburn-on-Tyne --- and a new ship launched by the Countess of Dartmouth. H.M.S. NAIAD joins the Navy --- one of the cruisers provided for in the programme of 1936/1937 --- the first of its class to be launched. Another unit in the sum total of Britain's naval ~~effix~~ strength --- another guarant^{ee} of security and peace.

We're telling sea-stories --- and no good yarn of the high seas can be complete without a sea-serpent. This picture comes from Provincetown, Massachusetts. Nobody ever believes a sea-serpent story, but this certainly looks like one.

Turn back the pages of sea-history --- there's romance again on the ocean highways. Windjammer in trouble --- the last of the four-masters ran ashore in Nantucket Sound and there she lies decks awash, whipped by the salt spray --- breaking up in the rolling swell under the feet of our frozen cameraman

Frozen --- who wouldn't be? This is how the fishing boats come home from the fishing off the Grand Banks --- yes, every year they come back like this from a 750-mile voyage, a floating iceberg. Say, sailor --- how do you tie a knot?

Yes, the sea in winter-time is alive with heavy drama --- here's fire to add ~~taxix~~ its terror to the bite of the gale and the toss of the waves. The British freighter ~~Silverash~~ Silverash in dock at Brooklyn --- on fire.
