

IRISH GOLF TOURNAMENT.

669

The Irish Cinema and Theatre Golfing Society held their first tournament on the picturesque course of the Grange Golf Club at Rathfarnham. ~~It~~ It was a day<sup>out</sup> for holiday folk who came to enjoy the fresh air and see some interesting golf. Jack Ellis was in good form ~~with~~ and with a score of 70 looked a certain winner. Hugh Margey was probably a bit upset by his partners brilliant play. Joe Rackow, the popular secretary, sank his putt in full view of our camera <sup>- put to show off!</sup> Henry Lyons, whilst playing up to his usual high standard, could not beat his handicap. Leonard Ging, the esteemed president, played a useful approach. Tom O'Connor who had big hopes of victory, was upset by the noise of the camera, and so lives to fight another day. Leonard Ging drove-pitched and putted rather too often to be amongst the Big Pots. John Fagan was not in his usual form, but offered no excuses nor did he glare at our cameraman. Wally Chambers played a sound game, but just failed to bring off that little something needed for a win. Goff Nash showed how a chip shot should be played down on the green and right into the hole. Stephen Whelan all the way from Cork, was off his <sup>drive</sup> ~~game~~ driving, so failed in his hopes. None of the competitors could blame the gallery for their shortcomings. James Kavanagh failed to find his usual form, but nevertheless finished 3rd. After the days golf, everyone gathered for the important event - the prize giving for the lucky ones. President Leonard Ging presented the Walter Mc Nally Cup to the winner, Gerald O'Grady, whose card showed the fine
