On shore the Admiral ~~took the salute and~~ inspected Kenya Naval Volunteer Reserves on the occasion of their change over to Royal Navy administration. He watched them [redacted] receiving instruction on various naval topics and also at drill, but most interesting of all was pay day when they sign their names with a thumb print. I'll bet there were some thunbprints in that soap, too.

Further east still --- and south --- arrival of the former Governor General of Madagascar; on a British ship, en route for internment. ~~Also on board were some Free French airmen who are doing their bit against the Axis.~~

And now to British Somaliland --- a company of the Somali Camel Corps in training. They are regulars who were standing by on the borders of French Somaliland, but now Jibuta has joined the Allied cause with the rest of France's African Empire.

They have British officers, but their N.C.O's are Somali's; all are excellent marksmen; and although there are not many Camel Corps now in existance they are particularly suited to this type of country.

Am I ~~boring~~ boring you?
