

Paying tribute to the dear old trams- and their rattling good service, Brum's Civic Heads step aboard to make the final journey to the Depot.

And when the historic run begins, there's not even "standing room" aboard the rocking monster.

On arrival at Steel House Lane, the old "bone-shakers" receive a fond farewell from the sorrowing masses of young and old alike.

It's a sad day for many employees, who have ~~been~~ over 40 years of service to their credit.

Now the Chairman of the Transport Committee takes over the controls before the final journey to Miller Street.

And the lucky ones inside wave their greetings to well-wishers outside.

Yes- it's the end of an era for Birmingham folks- as the Hub of the Universe pays respectful homage to a once-popular means of transport.

Soon buses will take over- but to-day, ~~it's~~ it's still the reign of the tram.

So it's congratulations for the driver, who takes the tram on its last run into the depot,- where many a motorist has wished it in the past.
