In honour of gallantry in Korea 2068 27th Oct. 53

Two years ago, in Korea, General Van Fleet (AT THAT TIME the Eighth Army Commander) bestowed America's highest military honour, the Presidential Unit Citation, on men of the 1st Battalion, the Gloucestershire Regiment, who survived the grim battle at the Imjin River action.

And today, at a Woolwich ceremony, the men of "C" Troop, 170th Independent Mortar Battery, Royal Artillery (who shared that proud Citation for gallantry) marched past Major-General Mack Lewis. And then the men (recently home from Korean prison-camps) heard their own Troop Commander read the Citation of their epic three-day battle. SOUND.

And, at Falmouth, another hero of Imjin, Lieut. Colonel Carne (recovering from after his long prison-camp ordeal) heard that his supreme courage and leadership had won him the Victoria Cross. Britain's highest award for

Back at Woolwich, Major-General Mack Lewis tells the Artillerymen of Colonel Carne's Award. SOUND.

And [illegible] has decorated Colonel Carne with the Victoria Cross and the D.S.O. (an award he won earlier in the campaign). The story of the "Glorious Gloucesters" is now complete. A story of [illegible] heroism and suffering in the cause of peace.

AT BUCKINGHAM PALACE

Our story of bravery ends on a human note as a Private of the Gloucesters (who was also a prisoner) who had just received his Victoria Cross and D.S.O. (an award he won in an earlier campaign) from the Queen congratulates his Commanding Officer, Colonel Carne, [illegible]

Royal Recognition that completes the story of a great County Regiment.
