London: Royal tribute to the "men-in-blue"; well-deserved recognition endorsed ~~highlighted~~ by the Nation, when the Queen (accompanied by the Duke of Edinburgh) reviewed Britain's Police Forces, in Hyde Park.

~~Her Majesty was escorted by Sir John Nott-Bower, Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis, who rode "Winston"; the Queen's, mount at ~~the~~ Trooping the Colour ~~parade~~ ^{famous} ~~ceremonials.~~~~

The inspection over, the Queen took the Salute at a march-past - led by the Mounted Section - men who have restrained, so patiently, the crowds at Cup Finals, Royal Processions or political gatherings.

From across the Border + Massed Pipers led the Scottish contingents. Royal recognition, too, for the Women's Forces, who combine tact ~~with~~ ^{efficiency -} charm often in difficult situations. (3)

The post-war recruit, the brave four-footed constable - and the mechanised section - all representing ~~a~~ 76,000 men and women throughout Britain, the ^{constant} Guardians of Law and Order.

The following day - on the lawns of Buckingham Palace, the Queen and the Duke of Edinburgh mingled with over 7,000 guests at a Presentation Party

Over now to Germany, where Princess Margaret's three-day visit to the British Forces has been marred by bleak, wintry weather.

At Sennelager, the Princess watched an impressive display by the famous 11th Armoured Division, said to ~~have~~ ^{be} the most modern mechanised ~~unit~~ ^{unit} in the British Army.

~~But at the end of~~ ^{But at the end of} a chilly occasion - the R.A.F. turned on the heat with a display of precision bombing.
