Princess visits British Red Cross--

April 19th. '55.

Yorkshire--- Wearing the uniform of the British Junior Red Cross, Princess Alexandra of Kent visited the Morris Grange Holiday Camp for handicapped children near Darlington.

During her tour, the Royal Patron joined the disabled youngsters in the open air, where their recreation is a form of remedial treatment.

One of the camp's most devoted workers, and a tower of strength, is Mr Bill Parker- himself disabled.

The camp is also a training centre for Red Cross Juniors who are taught to care for handicapped children.

^{her} A proud member of the Staff ^{is} the camp donkey, who- with other animals- helps to add to the general ^{feeling} atmosphere of gaiety, and create a healthy, normal atmosphere.

Whatever games they play, the young inmates are made to feel part of the family. Morris Grange is, indeed, a great pioneering effort by the Red Cross- ^{and one} that receives generous Royal encouragement.
