

Soccer stars of the future

26th April 1955

One day, the playing fields of Cambridge may well claim to have won international soccer-battles at Wembley. For, with the ~~co-operation~~ of the University, ^{co-operation} eighty boys from public and grammar schools, attended an intensive "coaching course" - organised by the Football Association.

Young England - learning to be soccer masters.

Another hopeful sign ^{of} the encouragement for schoolboy footballers - ~~for~~ ^a Wembley occasion, ^{which always} works up an insatiable soccer-appetite.

At the stadium, ninety thousand boys of all ages, watched Wales kick off against England - in a Schoolboy International.

England (playing in the traditional white shirts) had the better of the early play - and this fine effort ~~deserved a better~~ - deserved a better fate.

After a goalless first half - the English forwards ran riot - with three goals in three minutes - scored by Bunch, Dawson and Wynn.

During a hectic attack (when Dawson scored number five for England) Collins, the young Welsh right-half, received a shoulder-injury and was carried off. He pluckily resumed later - nursing a bruised shoulder. Finally, young David Cliss laid-on a goal, for Ian Hall to round off a six-nothing victory for our "stars of the future".
